Video capture You can buy video capture cards with composite video output for the Mac; I have an old one that I use for rudimentary video capture. There are also many different types of cameras on the market today and it is possible to use a camera's built-in video capabilities with a capture card. If you want to video capture on a Mac, here are a few of

Q: Read, parse, and format date from json in javascript I have a json object from my html5 client side form and I want to use JavaScript to read, parse, and format the date that the user enters. I'm using jquery-1.10.2.min.js and web.js. Here's what I'm using: form = $("#myForm") form.serialize() .done(function(json){ //data returned }); I'm not sure how to read the date that was input by the user. I've read up on how to use time.js from here. I know I can just use a regular date object to hold the data and just do new Date(string); but the problem I have is that I want to store that in my json object so that I can just pass it on to my nodejs server. I've also seen a few other solutions that I haven't been able to incorporate into my particular project. var date = new Date(); var formattedDate = date.format("dddd, MMMM Do YYYY, HH:mm:ss"); That's the solution I had been wanting to use but it won't work because my date object is a string not a datetime object. If you look at my node server I use Date in my routes. app.get('/user/:name', function(req, res, next){ var user = { name: req.params.name, date: userDate }; console.log(user); res.send(200, user); }); I really just need help getting started here. There are really no clear directions on what I need to do. If I need to reference a different library or some sort of object to help out please let me know. Thanks! A: You can simply add a type attribute to a date object with a data type of date or string. var date = new Date(); var formattedDate = date.format("dddd, MMM

Q: Can I use a public website as a form filler I want to send out a photo notification service to my users by email. Is it possible to use a public website as a form filler, so users fill in a web form and upload a photo to it as a form filled with the details. Then I will convert the file to an image and send it via email, is this possible? A: Sure, you can do this with PHP directly. The basic thing you'd need to do is include a file from the website with some HTML in it, and then parse it. A: Of course you can do this. Just create a form on the server you control, and have the user send a file upload to it. If you set the action to something like "notify.php", when you receive the file, just process it and send the email. If you have an asynchronous event (like jQuery) setup to trigger sending the email, then you can be pretty good to go. If you have some email server that you want to send email from, then you have to consider the parameters of this. Do you want to be able to send email from anything that can do that? If so, you need to be sure that it's no problem getting into your server and doing whatever it is you're doing. If it's not, then you need a separate account and you need to make sure that you have control over your email server. You need to be sure that you can block it, as almost certainly you will need to have some verification of the person who's email address you received. Cell Biology of Cancer Metastasis, Part 4: c-Met and the Biological Makers of Cell Metastasis. The biological processes underlying cell metastasis are too numerous to encompass in a single article. In this four part review, we have focused on key players and regulators of a few central processes such as matrix invasion, surface anchorage, and extracellular matrix signaling. We have provided examples of three of the most significant signaling pathways, which are the hepatocyte growth factor receptor (c-Met), epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR), and vascular endothelial growth factor receptor 2 (VEGFR2), as they interact with both cancer cells and stromal cells during metastasis. In our review, we have discussed the ligands, receptors, and signaling pathways to the ext
