

The mdi component and the mdig panel can both be used to add information to the mdi component, however, the mdi component gets automatically updated by the mdig panel, whereas the mdig panel gets automatically updated by the mdi component. Manually edit one of these lists to get to a serializing level you require, and then select the appropriate mdi component and mdig panel and update these lists. The mdi component and the mdig panel can both be used to add information to the mdi component, however, the mdi component gets automatically updated by the mdig panel, whereas the mdig panel gets automatically updated by the mdi component. For instance, Object Designer will now ask you to make these changes when it imports from Excel into PowerPoint, but you will not be asked if you want to change any other parts of the PowerPoint mdi component. Manually edit one of these lists to get to a serializing level you require, and then select the appropriate mdi component and mdig panel and update these lists. Similar to the mdi component, the mdig panel will also track the changes you make in a list, and it will update all instances of the mdi panel. The mdi component and the mdig panel can both be used to add information to the mdi component, however, the mdi component gets automatically updated by the mdig panel, whereas the mdig panel gets automatically updated by the mdi component. The mdi component and the mdig panel can both be used to add information to the mdi component, however, the mdi component gets automatically updated by the mdig panel, whereas the mdig panel gets automatically updated by the mdi component. It is best to use the mdi component and mdig panel together so you do not have to worry about making changes to both and accidentally changing some part of the panel to be tracked in the mdi component and accidentally changing the panel to be tracked in the mdi component.
