I've entered the data into the example notebook. I've also filled in the form that pops up when you start the code. Can you see the comments? In the original note book, there was an 'intro' section that explains how to use Kaggle Notebooks, and a form to provide your company's name, email, job title, and any other information you want to share. Here's the form: Step 6: Check out the Kaggle Notebook The public Kaggle Notebooks are available for anyone to download and use. The best thing about Kaggle Notebooks is that they are stored in a Google repository, so they will always be available if you need them. If you do, you can head over to and download the Kaggle Notebook from the archive, or you can share it with other users to collaborate on. For more information about Kaggle Notebooks, or to have a look at how they work, check out the Kaggle Notebook documentation.

Wrap Up Kaggle Notebooks provide a simple, structured way to share data, train models, and run machine learning code that anyone can use. All you need is an entry form and a Google account, and you're all set. You can even share your notebook with collaborators on Kaggle. Learn more about Kaggle Notebooks.
